The Plague Commissioner explained to the meeting that in view of the facts that the plague showed no signs of abating in Bombay and that some indigenous cases had occurred in Hubli, the preventive measures proposed to be adopted at the last meeting required to be taken in hand at once. In the matter of segregation sheds, those put up by Government near the Magadi Chattram Hospital were intended for the general public. It may not be possible to make provision there for the requirements of each separate caste. The authorities had selected other sites outside the limits of the town, and expected the richer members of each caste to put up caste sheds on these sites where their own castemen could be attended to, and if they so wished, treated by their own Hakims and Vydias.

Messrs. Khasim Saheb and Narana Setti said that as there had been no plague cases in Bangalore, putting up sheds would only cause unnecessary alarm. The Plague Commissioner explained that preventive measures had to be taken before the plague actually appeared. Everything was being done solely for the benefit of the people, and the alarm and panic will be too great when the first real case of plague had to be dealt with for any satisfactory arrangements being made for the comfort of the patients or their relations or for suitable provision for observance of caste customs.

The need for improvement in the matter of conservancy and drainage of the City was again brought up. The Plague Commissioner said that Government would soon sanction funds and establishment for carrying out improvements in the City which in addition to being of help to keep out the plague will do lasting good to the City.

The Plague Commissioner also mentioned that in the matter of Inspection, 14 nurses, belonging to the different communities, were being trained for examining women.

Several of those present said that it would cause needless alarm if Government servants entered houses, administered medicines, and removed the patients.

Mr. Amir Ali explained at the instance of the Plague Commissioner that medicines would not be administered by force and that nurses and others would not remove patients. They would simply report to the higher authorities, and a person suspected to be suffering from the plague would be removed only under the orders of the higher authorities, such as the Plague Commissioner, Senior Surgeon, Civil Surgeon, or the Municipal President; what they (the meeting) were required to do was to put up caste sheds to which patients could be removed and where they could be attended to and every comfort and convenience provided. It was not as if patients were removed by force to strange hospitals and treated there against their will. The patient would be removed as it were, to another house of his own and there attended to by his own people and doctors. This had to be done in the interests of the City at large.

Mr. Hakim Abdul Khasim Saheb said that the disease was not contagious as doctors and others who attended on patients did not catch it.

The Plague Commissioner replied that it might or might not be contagious; but it was known that if it appeared in one place and was neglected, it would spread all over the locality and slowly and surely the whole country would be infected and it would be very difficult to get rid of it. Segregation had been found to be effective in arresting its progress in its earliest stage and localising it and eventually in stamping it out and so segregation could not be dispensed with. What the authorities wanted the people to do was to co-operate with them in order to make segregation, so to speak, voluntary rather than compulsory and as little attended with discomfort as possible.

Those present agreed to the Plague Commissioner's suggestion that representatives of each caste should, after consultation with the people, meet the President and the Amildar on a date to be fixed and decide about the selection of sites for erecting sheds.
